Details:

The trip comes after many class discussions about the wood, its various different forms and uses. Its properties, fire ratings, as well as its use in interior design are being discussed in the subject.

The objectives of this trip where to let the interior design students physically see and experience the material that is wood, to see how it is manufactured, and its use in various forms, applications, and processes.

It was quite a different and enjoyable experience, to be out in the field. Students where fascinating to see how one of the oldest existing materials is manufactured into the different essential products that we use every day in our life, but never pay attention to, or think about, and how it is made. One thing students may remember is the natural smell of freshly carved wood that was spread throughout the whole factory.

In conclusion, it was a very enjoyable and a memorable trip and an excellent learning experience. All students has enjoyed and benefited a lot and have asked for more of such trip.
